We seek no narrow nationalism. Nationalism has a place in each country and should be fostered, but it must not be allowed to become aggressive and come in the way of international development. Asia stretched her hand out in friendship to Europe and America as well as to the suffering brethren in Africa. Asia has a special responsibility to the people of Africa. We must help them to their rightful place in the human race. The freedom that we envisage is not to be confined to this nation, or to a particular group of people, but must spread out to the whole human race. Universal human freedom also cannot be based on the supremacy of any particular class. It must be the freedom of the common man everywhere and full opportunities should be given him to develop.
